

OUR EXPERIENCE
YOUR SUCCESS

A photograph of a traditional Saudi Arabian courtyard. The ceiling is a complex, multi-layered geometric lattice structure, likely made of wood or metal, which allows light to filter through in a patterned way. The walls are made of a textured, light-colored material, possibly stone or plaster, and feature decorative elements like small, rounded protrusions. The courtyard is paved with dark, patterned tiles. In the background, a long, covered walkway with a series of columns leads to an open area with a building and some greenery.
